

Sinclair's attempt to influence the election by pressuring its stations to run an anti-Kerry presentation with nothing on the other side shows the undue influence being exercised by corporations as fewer owners amass more and more outlets. This is one more demonstration that the FCC ought not to be encouraging this but should be working for exactly the opposite situation, enabling the stations to have more of a local impact and more nearly represent the people they serve.